This is a 2004 film directed by Sergio Arau. It offers a satirical look at the consequences of all the Mexicans in the state of California suddenly disappearing. The film successfully manages to satirically demonstrate to the audience about racism as a problem in California and the rest of America through the lens of human diversity, structured functionalism as well as economic discrimination associated with Hispanic identity.

We will have some discussion after the film, printed questions to use as a guide will be available.

Rules of engagement:

We show respect to one another.

We agree to disagree.

We'll focus on what we see in the film.

We're not experts, we learn together.
